

RACE AND LAW
CURRICULUM WORKSHOP
INAUGURAL CONFERENCE

This inaugural workshop is designed to bring together law professors from across the nation to discuss how issues of race are incorporated into law school teaching and curriculum. Panels, led by some of the nation's leading race scholars, will address:

- The place of race in the law school curriculum
- Race in required and elective courses
- Race and pedagogy
- The consequences of teaching race

Through roundtable and panel discussions race scholars will discuss how race is introduced and integrated into teaching--lectures, course materials, and class discussions. A law student panel will discuss students' experiences and views on race in the classroom.

The Workshop is designed to provide participants with an opportunity to network, exchange ideas, discuss issues and problems, and share successes with colleagues who share similar research and teaching interests.

ABOUT THE CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF RACE AND RACE RELATIONS

The Center for the Study of Race and Race Relations (CSRRR) is an academic research and resource center. The Center's mission is to create and foster communities of dialogue on race and race relations and to promote historically and empirically based thinking, talking, research, writing, and teaching on race. The University of Florida is one of only five law schools in the nation that houses a center devoted to the study of race.
