Prof. Reid has performed pro bono legal work in matters concerning the death penalty, family law, environmental and land use regulation, Medicare, family law mediation, and legal professionalism/ethics. In a famous murder case, Prof. Reid helped to write a brief on behalf of amici interested in ensuring that expert testimony regarding postpartum psychosis be admissible. The brief successfully argued that mentally ill defendants deserved a verdict based on informed forensic psychiatric analysis. In a recent pro bono case before the Medicare Appeals Council, Prof. Reid successfully argued that a doctor was not liable for over $240,000 in alleged Medicare overpayments. Prof. Reid is currently working on a pro bono death penalty case to save, from execution, a man all lawyers working on the case believe to be innocent.

Personal

Prof. Reid is a saber fencer; and will soon publish her first novel. She is Native American and a "first-generation" college graduate. She has a keen interest in technology, science, mental health, and in methods used by tribal councils to resolve disputes.
